Re: Twelve related disputes by a single cardholder — charges of $450.00 each, April 8 – July 24, 2026

1. Summary

All twelve disputes were filed on August 1–2, 2026, each coded “no knowledge.” They arise from one continuing, legitimate service arrangement. The cardholder is the former spouse of our client and the father of her two children. In December 2025 he agreed in writing to pay for the family's ongoing services on a weekly basis, personally photographed and sent his card for that purpose, and supplied its registered ZIP code when told the first charge was about to be made (Exhibit D). The card he sent — an American Express Business card in his own name, ending 2007 — is the same card charged in every disputed transaction. Services were regularly delivered to the family; he received notice of every charge as it was made and raised no objection, no cancellation request, and no inquiry until the disputes were filed. The service recipient herself — the client — confirms every charge in a signed declaration and disputes none of them.

2. The Service Arrangement and Billing Model

The client enrolled herself and her two children in an ongoing family-services arrangement at $450.00 per week of active service — the equivalent of three sessions at $150.00 each, usable interchangeably among the family members, with the distribution varying week to week by the family's needs. Each charge therefore corresponds to a week of the continuing arrangement, not to a single itemized session with one named individual. This is a customary retainer-style billing model for continuing personal services.

The charge pattern itself demonstrates good-faith billing: twelve charges across approximately sixteen calendar weeks (gaps: April 22 to May 9; May 22 to June 11; June 26 to July 10). The merchant billed only for weeks of active service and paused billing when services paused — the opposite of an automated subscription charged without regard to delivery.

3. Services Were Rendered

In the ordinary course of its work, the merchant records client sessions. Exhibit C is a log of that session-audio archive: within the disputed billing period alone, fifteen (15) recorded sessions totaling 35 hours 22 minutes of service time delivered to the family; across the full arrangement since December 2025, thirty (30) recordings totaling 64 hours 35 minutes. Each entry is timestamped and duration-stamped by the recording system at the time of service, and the recordings themselves are preserved and available for review — contemporaneous proof of delivery stronger than any appointment calendar. Exhibit A (Memorandum) documents the arrangement; Exhibit B (the client's signed Declaration) confirms from the recipient's side that services were genuinely and regularly provided and that she disputes none of the charges.

4. The Charges Were Authorized

Every dispute is coded “no knowledge.” The contemporaneous written record refutes that characterization directly. In the December 2025 message thread at Exhibit D, the cardholder: (a) agreed in writing to weekly payment for the family's services (“Puede ser semanal, más tarde te enviaré la información de la tarjeta” — “It can be weekly; later I will send you the card information,” Dec. 6, 2025); (b) personally photographed and sent the front and back of his American Express Business card, in his own name, for that purpose; and (c) supplied the card's registered ZIP code (“32837”) on December 16, 2025, in direct response to being told the card was about to be charged. The card he provided ends in 2007 — the same card charged in each of the twelve disputed transactions (see §5).

The behavioral record corroborates what the written record shows: twelve charges over four months; a receipt issued through Square's receipt system for every charge; no dispute, no cancellation request, and no billing inquiry to the merchant at any time during the service period. The first indication of any objection was the filing of all twelve disputes together on August 1–2, 2026, after the services had been fully delivered. A cardholder who agrees in writing to a continuing arrangement, transmits his own card and ZIP code to fund it, watches it bill for four months while his family receives its benefit, and then disputes every charge as unknown to him is not describing an unauthorized transaction.

All twelve charges were made to the same American Express card ending 2007 — the card transmitted by the cardholder at Exhibit D. Square response deadlines: August 9, 2026 (disputes 1–9) and August 10, 2026 (disputes 10–12).

6. Exhibits

- A. Memorandum of Family Services Arrangement (executed [date], memorializing the oral arrangement; not backdated).
- B. Signed Declaration of the client — the service recipient and parent of the minor recipients — confirming the arrangement, the cardholder's agreement to pay, delivery of services, and that she disputes none of the charges.
- C. Session Recording Log — the Practice's session-audio archive for the three family members: 30 recordings, 64 hours 35 minutes in total; 15 recordings, 35 hours 22 minutes within the disputed billing period. Timestamped and duration-stamped at the time of service; recordings preserved and available for review.

- D. Written communications — the December 2025 message thread in which the cardholder agrees in writing to weekly payment, transmits photographs of his American Express Business card (ending 2007; images redacted for card security), and supplies the card's registered ZIP code. Spanish originals with English translations; the December 12, 2025 audio message is preserved and available on request.
- E. Receipts for each charge were issued through Square's own receipt system at the time of each transaction and are reflected in Square's records.

The merchant respectfully requests that each dispute be resolved in the merchant's favor. All statements above are true to the best of the merchant's knowledge, and supporting records beyond the exhibits are available on request.
